

Secondary Style: Insight

Leadership: Empowering yourself

With your secondary style of Insight you empower yourself through your calm ability to see what is of most value in any situation and you take your time to understand how things work. You often have deep insights into others based on your ability to stand back and observe.

Leadership: Empowering others

You empower others through your insight and your willingness to share that insight with others. Your caring nature from your Insight influence drives you to put others first. This together with your generosity ensures that those around you benefit from your intuitive understanding of issues.

Team work

Teams and groups are lucky to have you on board with your Insight influence as you care deeply about others and will allow others the space they need to develop and grow. You are even tempered and a good listener and often find yourself as the 'go-to' person when others have issues they want to talk about.

Conflict

Because you are amiable and generally get on with most people you may find yourself acting as peacemaker between others with more volatile personalities. Your preference not to have to change direction very suddenly could cause you to be viewed as counterproductive to perceived necessary changes by other team members. There may be times when you need to speak up in a group to ensure that your valuable opinion is heard and not to feel resentful if others are more vocal and forceful in group situations. You may also want to reflect on those areas where you should not compromise and avoid going along with the group, so as not to upset anyone.

Careers

Your Insight traits would be well suited to environments that require compassion, guidance, support and well thought out input such as Project Management, Nursing, Elderly Care, Teaching and Personal Assistant roles.
